Additional costs:

Extras, tips and gratuities: Some boats charge for drinks and may charge a corkage fee for any wine you bring yourselves. You should also budget for ancillary items such as purchases, internet charges, getting laundry done and other matters of a personal nature. We will provide advice for tips which are usually shared between guide and crew.

Best Time to Travel

The best months for the Galapagos Islands are December to March, when the seas are at their calmest. You should avoid September as there is a sea mist at this time. In fact a lot of Galapagos cruise ships go into dry dock at this time of the year for repairs and refurbishment before the new season starts.

Practical Information

The Galapagos National Park authorities do not allow boats with more than 100 passengers to operate in the archipelago. All boats have to file their itineraries with the authorities, who strictly control the numbers of people arriving at any one place at any time. Galapagos cruises usually have two or three landings per day which will be either be 'dry' or 'wet' (directly onto land or into shallow water). There are just 54 land sites and 62 scuba-diving or snorkelling sites in the Galapagos Islands and small groups are allowed to visit in time-limited slots of two-to-four hours. If you are on one of the bigger ships you will disembark into small groups for landings. All groups are accompanied by naturalist guides, licensed by the Galapagos National Park authorities.
